Vocabulary Development

In their book Differentiated Instructional Strategies for Reading in the Content Areas, Carolyn Chapman and Rita King devote a chapter to Vocabulary Development. The authors offer that it is most effective to relate new words to the students' background and to vary the routines surrounding vocabulary development. "The mind likes unsolved mysteries, challenges, and discoveries. Treat the introduction of a vocabulary word as an adventure by creating anticipation and excitement."

There are so many words to learn that the teacher must carefully select the words he/she will teach directly. Pre-assess student understanding and familiarity of the words to be taught to determine which words really the most emphasis. Students need multiple encounters with a word to truly "know" its meaning.
